★ SID President's Welcome

Distinguished Guests, SID members, Investigators, Clinical and Translational Researchers and Members of our Specialty Societies,

I want to extend a warm and heartfelt welcome to the 83rd annual Society for Investigative Dermatology meeting. As an SID member for over 20 years, and now as its current President, I have an intense sense of pride in all of our amazing accomplishments – past, present, and ongoing - that have contributed to our understanding of skin biology and disease and have translated into better therapies for our patients. Your work has also provided insights into the prevalence and genetics of skin disease in addition to helping us recognize the physical and psychological burden that skin disease oftentimes carries. Our field is dynamic, and your discoveries have impact across many disciplines – immunology, microbiome, oncology, epidemiology, gene regulation, stem cell biology, photobiology, epithelial biology, socio-behavioral-health quality, systems biology – the list is exhaustive. For some perspective...

The SID was born out of a vision to serve a segment of science previously unrepresented by the medical societies of the United States: Investigative Dermatology. The founders saw a need for an organization ... to promote investigative dermatology to a fully respected position among the medical specialties. In tandem with the establishment of the society, they sought to develop a new scientific journal that would act as a singular resource for investigative work in cutaneous biology. This vision was realized when the SID was founded, bylaws were adopted and a board of nine directors was appointed on June 10, 1937 at the Hotel Dennis in Atlantic City, New Jersey. The Journal of Investigative Dermatology (JID) was launched, with Marion B. Sulzberger as its first editor, and the first Annual Meeting was held in April 1938 in New York City.

At this inaugural meeting topics ranged from “Vitamins and Fatty Acids as Fungicides”, the “Transfer of Immunity to Syphilis from Mother to Off-Spring” and the “Role of Skin in Immunity”.

We have come a long way since that first meeting – our society now includes representation from across the country and around the world. I am certain that the founders could have never envisioned the SID’s growth and current success. And so it is, due to the hard work and commitment of our Program and Education Committee Members and Chairs, as well as the entire Organizing Committee, that we bring to you another incredible slate of special guest lectures, symposia, and cutting-edge research. We are particularly excited to highlight a new session on Climate Change as it relates to skin biology and disease. I invite each and every one of you to become engaged, or even more engaged, in this amazing society and to network throughout the meeting. The SID community is expansive, and our goal is to extend our outreach even further to include all investigators and clinician-scientists whose focus is skin biology and disease research – we call on you to help.

I would like to close by thanking the talented and dedicated SID Staff, led by Becky Minnillo and Jim Rumsey, for their tireless efforts on our behalf. To this end, over 30 members of the SID have been actively engaged in an extensive process to develop a new Strategic Plan– Accelerating Discovery – with our over-riding Mission of Catalyzing Breakthroughs in Skin Science. We are excited to bring this to you, our members, at this meeting. We value your input!
